Jason T. Graves

Jason lives in North Carolina with his family and a menagerie of small, domestic animals. He takes his coffee black, and—when he is not editing, tutoring, running his businesses, or conducting mysterious, mad-scientists experiments—he writes mysterious and beautiful fiction.

He is the author of Blood Roses and Morning Stars, the first two books of the Noctivagas Chronicle—Mars Rising is in the works. Gretchen Thyrd: On the Bridge was published 2016.

In 2014 his third novel, The Alewife: Curse of Obsession was published by a now-defunct NC Publisher, inspiring Jason to take the final steps to starting Prospective Press and rereleasing the novel with the rest of his novels.

Jason is the editor and CEO of Prospective Press.

A PROSPECTIVE PRESS

We are an avid independent publisher, connecting you to great stories by great authors. We produced books in the traditional way—a commitment to quality and a keen interest for compelling content. However, we also keep an eye to the future, watching for ways to make your reading experiences even more enjoyable and satisfying. From the Piedmont region of North Carolina, we bring you our world of quality genre fiction and select non-fiction and invited you to join us in Seeing the Future.
